Ex Situ is a workshop that will explore techniques for cameras meds ethnographic writing. This experimental writing practice has been used by Craig Campbell and Yoke Sum Wong in exhibition and publication as part of the on-going Ex Situ project. Ex Situ is a collaborative experiment aimed at exploring creative acts of description and evocation. The central premise of Ex Situ is that situatedness is always mediated by distance and time. Rather than take this dislocation as a given, we foreground it in our thinking about the ethics, affects, and aesthetics of description, evocation, and creation.
Ex-Situ is a collaboration led by Yoke Sum Wong and Craig Campbell

The forum begins with a group viewing of the exhibition video followed by a summary and discussion of the workshop. Finally guest commentators, including Natalie Loveless, Carolina Cambre, Chris Salter, David Howes and Arseli Dokumaci, among others, will be invited to participate in an open discussion of research creation, its promises and challenges.

Bio
Craig Campbell is Associate Professor of Anthropology at the University of Texas, Austin. He is a founding member of the Ethnographic Terminalia curatorial collective and author of the book Agitating Images. Dr. Campbell’s research is concerned with making as well as theorizing modes of description and evocation with a special focus on the ethnographic image. In particular, he has been exploring the possibility for ignored, overlooked, failed, defaced, degraded, manipulated, and damaged images to activate interpretive fields typically unacknowledged in conventional ethnographies and histories. This intermedia and aesthetic approach pushes the sensuousness of the world back into an intellectual and scholarly understanding of it.
